ARDFIELD - NICE TO MEET YOU!

Ardfield parish lies south of Clonakilty and takes in the whole peninsula. TY student and Ardfield parishioner Cian O'Donovan presents his parish here for summer visitors and would-be visitors from the other five parishes of our family of parishes. This is the third in a series of brief articles by TY students in Clonakilty Community College presenting our parishes in turn. (Ed.)

Living in Ardfield-Rathbarry is honestly something special. It is not just a small West Cork community — it is full of pride, history, and people who always look out for each other. There is a real sense of togetherness here, and that is what makes it feel like home.

The GAA club is a huge part of life. Whether you are playing, supporting, or just going for the atmosphere, it brings everyone together. There has been plenty of great wins over the years, and the underage teams are flying it too.

We have got some of the best beaches around — Red Strand is perfect for swimming and chilling, and Long Strand is great for surfing or just a peaceful walk. After the beach, The Fish Basket is the go-to spot — their food is unreal, and it is right by the sea. There is also a lovely campsite nearby where loads of families and tourists stay in summer, which gives the place a great buzz.

Watching over it all is the Galley Head Lighthouse, one of the coolest sights around. Every year, there is the Galley Head Swim, which is a serious challenge but a brilliant event for raising money and bringing people together.

Both Ardfield and Rathbarry churches are important too — they have been at the centre of community life for generations. And you cannot forget Rathbarry Hall — it is where loads of things happen, from classes to parties to community meetings. It is the hub for loads of local events and get-togethers.

One of the best parts about living here is how people support each other. Whether it is a fundraiser, a clean-up, or someone just needing a hand, people always show up. Events like the Sandscope Fishing Competition are great craic and bring everyone together — young and old.

There are loads of walkways too — through woods, along the coast, or past fields — all with amazing views. Whether you are walking your dog, running, or just clearing your head, there is always somewhere nice to go.

We have had plenty to be proud of — Rathbarry has done brilliantly in the Tidy Towns, and the GAA club keeps the sporting spirit alive. It just shows how much people care about where we live.

Ardfield Rathbarry Tennis Club, founded in 1996 by local youths, has become a key part of the community in West Cork. With two floodlit, all-weather courts beside St James' GAA grounds, the club offers year-round access to players of all ages and abilities. It plays a strong role in community life, supporting junior development, adult league teams, and hosting regular social evenings and tournaments. The addition of a modern clubhouse in 2016 further strengthened its role as a welcoming, inclusive space for sport and connection.

Ardfield-Rathbarry might be small, but it is full of heart, good people, and unreal places. It's one of those spots where once you have been, you never really forget it.

Come and visit us! During the summer, Sunday Mass is celebrated in St James' church, Ardfield (P85 DD40), at 10.00am.

PARDON ME?! WHAT WAS THAT AT MASS?

We proclaim your death, O Lord, and profess your resurrection, until you come again. Our way of celebrating Mass in the Roman Catholic Church is a mixture of traditions from different parts of the world put together in the eternal city. The acclamation 'We proclaim your death' which we began using in the late 1960s is typical of Syrian practices. The exact wording here, obviously based on the words of St Paul 'When you eat this bread...', is from a manuscript found in a ruined monastery in Egypt in the early 1900s. Its succinct wording made it a good choice.

But what do the words mean? When we come to Mass we are making plain that Our Lord's death on the cross – historically not disputed – is of great importance and is beneficial for us: we are proclaiming its significance merely by turning up. The resurrection, historically disputed by non-believers although the evidence of witnesses supporting it is overwhelming, is something we believe in, so we profess our belief in Our Lord's resurrection by going to Mass. Finally, Mass is always celebrated with the longing for the Lord's return when we will no longer celebrate Mass at all.
